POETRY.

Old Winter is Coming.

BY JOSEPH ANTHONY, JR. Old Winter is coming-old Winter so drear-His heralds, unwelcome, proclaim he is near; Ther's a wail on the blast, there are voices that

"The spirit of Summer is passing away."

Sweet evening, the balm of the breezes is o'er, And black is the blast on mountain and moor; There's shadow and gloom in the depths of the dell,

And the trees of the forest are mourning farewell.

Old Winter is coming, once more to rejoice In his robings of snow and his trappings of ice-The dreamest of despots, who bends to his sway, Sweet sister of Summer, the beautiful day.

Dear evening! with thee no more on the gree In joyance of sport are the villagers seen; And the music of childhood, in gambols n more.

Is borne on the breeze from the cottager's doo All s. ont and chill-not a bird on the bough Is heard forth to warble his vesper hymn now Not a caw from the rook, as he wingeth his flight

O'er meads where are creeping the shadows of night.

Old Winter is coming-old Winter so drear-His heralds, unwelcome, proclaim he is near: There's a wail on the blast, there are voices that

"The spirit of Summer is passing away."
